A gerund is a noun made from a verb by adding '-ing'. You can use a gerund as the subject, the complement, or the object of a sentence. But the words ending in 'ing' can also be termed as a present participle. Therefore, it is vital to understand the difference between the two.

Example:

1. Seema is eating
2. My class is boring.

When a verb is used as a noun then it can be referred as gerund. For e.g. Dancing is fun.

Next, a gerund can be used as the subject, the complement, or the object of a sentence.

• Gerund as a subject

A gerund can be used as a subject.

Examples:

1. Smoking is injurious to health.
2. Brushing your teeth is important
3. Flying makes me nervous.

• Gerund as an object.

In the same way, gerund can be used as an object,

Examples:

1. Do you like smoking?
2. I don't like singing songs.
3. My favorite hobby is dancing contemporary.

• Gerund after a preposition

For using gerund after a preposition, you must use a verb which also functions as a noun (gerund), only then you can use it after a preposition. It generally relates one activity to another.

Examples:

1. I look forward to hearing from you
2. Do you object to working late?

Let's take a quiz for gerund after prepositions and check how many of them you get right.
