An offer letter or an appointment letter is an important document as it is the first written communication that takes place between a new employee and the company. Hence, the offer letter needs to be professional adhering to a company's rules and policies, at the same time, self explanatory and precise.

What should offer letter include?

An offer letter is a written document of your intent to hire the person addressed in the letter. Even though, you would like to customize and formulate each letter as per the candidate and post, you could make use of one professional and proficient letter to enable you to form the other letters around the same/ similar guidelines. Make sure to speak good English while handing the letter over, as you need to explain to the newbie what exactly the letter communicates.

Create 'Letter' Templates:

Recruiting employees includes preparing job descriptions, checking applications, short listing, interviewing, selecting employees and generating the required paperwork and letters to complete the process. All of which require you to keep your spoken English conversation seamless. As recruiting is almost something that is carried out on an ongoing basis, creating a standard letter template and format is a smart alternative.

Final Tips:

The offer letter needs to be handed over to the employee only after you have had a verbal discussion with the candidate. As an HR executive, it would be ideal if you speak influently English with your employees, old or new. Remember, you should extend an offer letter only after having a clear verbal conversation about the salary and negotiation of the same. Make a copy of the job letter, one for either of the parties. Get both signed by the candidate and remember to keep a smile on your face at all times.
