Hello, fellow students! How is your English speaking practice coming along? I am sure, with our helpful blogs full of tips and tricks combined with your own passion to learn, you will soon speak fluent English, if you are not doing so already!

As an online spoken English tutor, we get a number of queries about English speaking and how one can achieve fluency. Well, this definitely is not a one-day job. Learning English is a gradual process, something that you do every single day. There is a whole lot to learn – and trust me, it is a fun process.

In today's exercise, we will learn how you can cancel your credit card subscription.

Before proceeding, let us understand what a credit card is. Often people get confused between a credit and a debit card. A debit card is a simple card that you get when you open a bank account. It is simply a reflection of the money that you have in your account and you can use your debit card to spend the amount limit on your account.

A credit card, however, allows you to spend a little more than what you have in your account, and you need to reimburse the amount you have spent later on. Though handy, credit cards can often pose a problem when you overspend and then have to pay later. Should you find yourself in such a situation, it is better to cancel your credit card subscription and this is how you can do it.
