You are on your first telemarketing assignment and are eager to get going on the job. You have the knowledge and confidence, but are unsure about the right words for your first call. Many first time marketing callers are stuck on sales vocabulary. A sales talk can make or break a deal and even careers depend on the right usage of sales phrases. Fluent English speaking skills are vital in formulating the best sales conversations. Different clients require different conversation technique depending upon the nature of business and requirements.

Presenting an effective sales call is very important as an organization's growth depends on it. The best way to go about making one is to understand the character and personality of the prospective client. This will allow you to prepare a cold call sample customized to that particular client, ensuring higher chances of success. Apart from this, you can devise tried and tested sales call formats, which can reasonably guarantee your success. However, ensure that you do not blindly follow them and see if they are relevant to your requirements.
