You are returning home from your office in the local train, when suddenly you notice that your purse is missing. You remember that you had your debit and credit cards in your wallet and now are worried sick about them being misused. What steps will you take to recover from this mishap? How will you go about reporting the problem and take corrective measures? You should take immediate steps without losing time so that you can prevent miscreants from misusing your private information.

Things To Remember When Reporting Your Stolen Debit / Credit Card To A Police And A Bank:

1. Block your card

The first step that you should take with regards to your lost wallet is to call up the bank and block the card. This measure will render your card invalid and you can also request a new card to be issued at your address. Give clear instructions in fluent English to avoid any misunderstandings.

2. Report to the police

While the chance of finding a stolen wallet is very slim, the second important step which you should take is to report the matter to the police. With some luck, you may find your lost purse. A police report will also help you in the future for any legal documentation.
